

What We Heard Report

Purpose of This Document

The City of Edmonton is updating its 2016-2025 Affordable Housing Strategy, which will guide the City's involvement in the affordable housing sector from 2023 - 2026. Work on the project began in January 2022 and will be completed in 2023.

Stakeholder engagement is a critical component of this project. Between May and July 2022, Administration used multiple methods to engage stakeholders to gather input. This document includes a summary of the approach and feedback gathered during the course of engagement. Before being organized into themes, feedback was anonymized and edited for clarity and brevity. Feedback is reported based on the frequency of responses (where applicable).

This document is intended to help identify and prioritize actionable ideas, which will then be assessed at a high level for feasibility. The results will be reflected in the implementation plan that will accompany the final Updated Affordable Housing Strategy.

A Note on Engagement

In addition to the engagement undertaken specifically to inform the Updated Affordable Housing Strategy, other relevant and important engagement results were accounted for in the development of the foundational elements in Attachment 1, and will be considered as well during the development of the final Updated Affordable Housing Strategy, including:

- Community and lived experience engagements undertaken for the development of the Edmonton Affordable Housing Needs Assessment (see Attachments 2, 3 and 4).
- Administration's planned actions in response to the Indigenous Affordable Housing Strategy recommendations (pg 129 - 182), which were presented to Edmonton City Council on June 27, 2022 and were created through a separate and robust engagement process, led by consultants in collaboration with an Advisory Committee, Indigenous partners in Edmonton's housing and homelessness sector, representatives of Treaties and Nations, and Indigenous communities.
- Administration also consulted relevant past engagement insights, specifically engagement related to the City Plan (2018) and the homelessness prevention strategy (2020). These are summarized in Appendix 1.

Review of 2016 - 2025 Affordable Housing Strategy: Engagement Feedback

In engaging stakeholders to review the 2016-2025 Affordable Housing Strategy, Administration received two broad types of inputs from engagement participants: 1) responses and commentary on areas where the City had performed well; and 2) suggestions of actions missing from the 2016-2025 Strategy.

In reviewing the foundational elements of the Updated Affordable Housing Strategy, participants' responses can also be organized in two different categories: 1) suggestions for improving or clarifying language of updated guiding principles, goals, objectives, and city's roles; and 2) additional ideas of actions for City's consideration.

The feedback reported below combined the suggested action ideas for City's consideration received during both rounds of engagement due to significant overlap.

Summary ideas for City of Edmonton's Consideration

- Build more affordable housing and be part of the solution: expedite and streamline processes for development applications; have an easy to navigate step by step process to follow.
- Funding support: create dedicated funding for homelessness prevention, like providing eviction prevention supports and programs; leverage funding from other orders of government to provide funding to homeless serving organizations.
- Pilot innovative approaches: support innovative and new preventative housing options and provide buffers so agencies can try new models, including dedicate funding to pilot innovative models
- Coordinate and demonstrate leadership: collaborate with market and non-market housing providers to to improve supply of affordable housing. For programs, the City of Edmonton has a decentralized way of gaining access to Housing First through 22 agencies coordinated by Homeward Trust Edmonton, which is a good model. It is the municipality's role to support coordinated access to everything. One suggested process is the Providing Access to Affordable Housing (PATH) model.
- Support good data: leverage data to focus on root causes and engage in preventative strategies
- Educate the public: 1) shift attitudes, stereotypes and racism towards people that require affordable housing; 2) promote cultural awareness and provide education on mental health challenges, addictions and poverty ro housing provider; and 3) shift the spotlight from who is homeless to why people are homeless to pave way for community acceptance of individuals and models of affordable housing.
- Further community engagement: 1) encourage collaborative conversations across sectors, including businesses, as a way to create good models that ensure social agendas are at the table; 2) at the core, include the voices of those with lived experience.
- Provide education, information and support services for community care helpers, natural caregivers and persons at risk of homelessness: 1) especially for youth that are homeless and need life skill training and safe connections to family; 2) assistance navigating forms and other government program requirements.
- Provide trauma-informed education, training and information to frontline employees: include transit operators, security, bylaw officers, peace officers, operations and recreation facility staff.
- Advocate and coordinate with with surrounding municipalities: to discuss homelessness issues, prevent the migration and uprooting of people into Edmonton; other municipalities have a role in developing policies that prevent people from being discharged into homelessness; coordinate on other municipalities in leveraging provincial transfers payments to help people who can't live on income supports, rent controls, and to be a voice for agencies at the provincial level.

Appendix 3: Engagement tool used to review Foundational Elements of the Updated Affordable Housing Strategy

Q1. Are there any gaps in these principles? If so, what are they?

The foundational elements of the updated strategy are guided by the following updated principles to achieve its goals and objectives:

Fundamental - Affordable housing is fundamental to human dignity; the physical, economic and social well being of individuals, families and communities.

Collaborative - Housing needs are a complex, multi-faceted problem that requires consistent effort from all levels of government, partners and stakeholders. The City leads and values innovative solutions that require collaboration and working in partnerships.

Evidence-based - Our programs and projects are informed by research, engagement and the voices of those who we serve. We make evidence-based decisions and recommendations based on ongoing monitoring and evaluation of local housing needs and context.

Accessible - The City supports affordable housing that is universally accessible for those individuals living with a range of disabilities including physical, sensory, developmental and cognitive.

Diverse - The City encourages the design and construction of diverse types of housing to expand affordable housing choices for those in core housing need and who belong to multiple population groups with intersecting identities.

Sustainable - The City encourages the development and retrofitting of affordable housing that is aligned with its vision of building an efficient, sustainable and resilient community.

Integrated - The City promotes compact, mixed use developments within districts that support equitable access to transportation and amenities.

Reconciliation - In the spirit of reconciliation the City will partner with organizations, businesses and citizens to respond to the systematic racism and discrimination that indigenous people disproportionately face in accessing affordable housing.

Q2. What, if anything, is missing from these objectives that could help the City achieve Goal 1?

Goal 1: People have access to affordable housing in all areas of the city

Objective 1: Enable the development of affordable housing
