Harrison Sheremeta	Edmonton Historical Board
	Harrison is an urban planner with the City of Edmonton that is dedicated to seeing the full potential of surplus City-owned land realized through innovative development, which includes the preservation and celebration of historic resources. Harrison has a keen interest in architecture, local history and land development patterns, which lends well to his work on the Edmonton Historical Board. He can often be seen walking and cycling through our city's neighbourhoods, looking for historic resources that deserve protection and recognition. Born in Edmonton but raised in a small town north of the city, Harrison studied urban planning at the University of Waterloo in Waterloo, Ontario, where he graduated with a Bachelor of Environmental Studies in Honours Planning, specializing in Urban Design. When he is not exploring Edmonton and abroad, Harrison is usually adding to his large collection of past and present National Geographic magazines and historical maps.
